III Short Answer Questions.

② Why is man considered a social animal?

Ans - Diversities are also found in the human society. Man lives in a society because he cannot fulfill all his needs by himself. He depends upon others for the fulfilment of his various needs. A farmer produces food grains not only for himself but also for others. At the same time, he depends upon others for the fulfilment of his various needs such as clothes, building materials, etc. In this way people are interdependent on each other.

That is why man is considered as a social animal.

IV Long Answer Questions.

① Explain the factors that gave India such a vast variety of differences.

Ans. The factors that gave India such a vast variety of differences are geographical and historical. In fact the geography of a place has an important bearing on the history of a place. We can see that it has different physical features - mountains, valleys, plains etc. All these formed a natural boundary separating our country from other neighbouring countries. Each region developed its own history as it remained largely untouched by outside influence. Even their occupation was greatly influenced by geographical factors. For example Jammu & Kashmir is in the extreme north has very cold while Tamil Nadu is in extreme south and has moderate climate.
